An Arkaness exchange gives the Little Rock and Fort Smith ratiroad credit for developing quite a large section of the State of Arkaness. Since 1875 it has sold of its own that the sales were made to actual settler, that the sales were made to actual settler, of the Muthal Union of service, reduction of expenses, etc., of the Muthal Union, when that the sales were made to actual settler, hat the sales were made to actual settlers, and not to speculators. During the same vicinity of the road. This shows, therefore, that the Little R ck and Fort Smith railway has been the means of selling along its line, and at its own expense, 1,200,000 acres of land, amounting in area to very nearly the whole State of Delaware, and 50 per cent. more than the whole ferritory embraced in the State of Rhode Island.

The bell was continued as a means of signal until about 1856, when the steam whistle was used instead. It was in 1859, they have the steam whistle was used instead. It was in 1852 that laws were first passed for the government."

We have received, through the kindness of Mr. Sidney D. Maxwell, advance sheets from the Thirty fourth Annual Report of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, pages 98 to 110 inclusive, which embraces an interesting report of the river business of that city during the past year. The details of the report show an increase in the number of arrivals and apartness, also a large increase in tonage. It refers to the increase in the capacity of the Portland canal by which boats of larger dimensions could reach Cincinnati

Eight steamboats have been built, of an aggregate capacity of 1299 tons, against seven steamers, of 1169 tons, the previous year. The report dwells at length upon the government improvements in progress in the various tributaries of the Ohio, and the work of the Lighthouse Board. This department of the coming work will be of value to the river fraternity on all Western waters, 28 it embraces matters in which all are more of less interested. WEATHER AND RIVERS.
